Civil Rights Icon Ambassador Andrew Young

A towering figure in the continued fight for the civil rights movement, Young played a pivotal role in shaping the landscape of racial equality in the United States. As a key strategist and confidant to Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Young played a crucial role in the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), contributing to the success of landmark initiatives such as the Montgomery Bus Boycott and the March on Washington. His dedication to the principles of nonviolent protest mirrored King's, and his leadership skills were evident in their collective efforts to advance civil rights. Young became a transformative force in the city of Atlanta, serving as its mayor from 1982 to 1990. Under his guidance, Atlanta experienced remarkable growth and economic development, solidifying its status as a major urban center.

As a member of Congress and U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, Young has witnessed a country in turmoil on a number of fronts and has a breadth of experience to share about leading through uncharted circumstances.

At this year's summit, Ambassador Young will share insights on weathering leadership storms, drawing parallels between the challenges faced during the civil rights movement and those confronting leaders today.

Deputy U.S. Treasury Secretary Wally Adeyemo: A Visionary in Economic Leadership

Complementing Ambassador Young's historic perspectives, Deputy Secretary Wally Adeyemo brings a wealth of experience from the economic frontiers. As the Treasury Department's No. 2 official and chief operating officer, Adeyemo has been at the forefront of major economic policy decisions since the 2008 Financial Crisis. His journey spans public, private, and nonprofit sectors, demonstrating a commitment to building a stronger and fairer economy.
